DESCRIPTION OF RESIDENTIAL ADDICTION TREATMENT SERVICES

Programs and Philosophy

Residents in Recovery Society offers long-term residential recovery programs for individuals that struggle with a substance use disorder. All residential programs offered by Residents in Recovery are abstinence-based, meaning there is zero tolerance for drug and alcohol use. Individuals and families will be discharged for violation of the drug and alcohol use policy.

Our Individual Sober Living Programs offer a continuum of care for an individual's treatment program that spans from Pre-Treatment Sober Living when one starts their recovery journey, to Post-Treatment Sober Living for those that have completed an in-patient residential treatment program and are looking to build their recovery capital. The Family Treatment Program is provided to women (and their children) struggling with addiction. Mothers embark on a holistic healing journey that incorporates the family into the treatment process. Originally established as a culturally based apprehension diversion program, residents in Recovery strongly believe that a family that heals together has a greater chance at long-term abstinence and positive outcomes.

Residents are provided with a combination of group psychoeducation, group therapy, individual counselling, parenting skill development, and life skills development. Utilizing several evidence-based curriculums and cultural supports, individuals work through their addiction and trauma and begin to heal. For individuals and mothers, the opportunity to take a long-term approach to healing offers the chance to work through family of origin issues and trauma. For those in the family program, since addiction affects the entire family, children partake in their own healing journey. Utilizing play therapy and developmental assessments, children begin to work through their own trauma and address developmental delays. Over time, individuals and the family heal, routine becomes second nature, individuals and the family unit begin to laugh once more.
